

Mario Strazzabosco MD, PhD is Professor of Medicine at Yale University, CT. He is Director of the Yale Liver Cancer Center and Deputy Director of the Yale Liver Center and is. Dr. Strazzabosco was the founding chief of the GI section at the “Ospedali Riuniti of Bergamo” where he was also Medical Director of Transplantation and then moved to Yale University (USA), as Professor of Internal Medicine and Gastroenterology, Director of the Transplant Hepatology Unit. Dr. Strazzabosco has also served as a Professor of Gastroenterology at the University of Milan-Bicocca in Italy and founding chief of the Section of Digestive Diseases, Chair of the Department of Surgery and Translational Medicine and Vice-president of the School of Medicine.

Dr. Strazzabosco is a member of several scientific societies and charity boards. He has served as Associate editor of Hepatology and of Liver International. He serves as a scientific reviewer for several funding bodies in US and Europe and is a regular member of the NIH HPPB study section. Dr. Strazzabosco is the principal investigator in a number of national and international research projects in the field of hepatology, liver transplantation and health care management and directs an NIH-sponsored lab at the Yale University School of Medicine.

The scientific activities of Dr. Strazzabosco has resulted in numerous publications in the major international journals. The main current research interests relate to the pathophysiology of biliary tract disease, biology of liver stem cells and liver repair, liver transplantation and liver cancer. He has received numerous awards and is a Fellow of the American College of Gastroenterology (FACG) a Fellow of the European Board of Surgery (transplant) (FEBS) and a Fellow of the American Association for the Study of Liver Disease (FAASLD).